You try to jerk free, but can't, and the zombie's teeth meet in your arm.

A gunshot deafens you, followed by two more in rapid succession. The hand releases your wrist and you stagger back, covered with the absolutely disgusting slimy gray exploded remains of zombie brains.

Brian comes running up behind you. "You okay, John?"

He apparently didn't see the zombie bite you, and his eyes haven't yet gone to the bite mark on your arm. What do you do?

- Show him.
- Jerk my sleeve over the bite mark before he notices.

You look at Kayden, who immediately backs up.

"I'm not going in there by myself," he says, trembling. "What if there's zombies in there? And it's dark—I won't be able to see anyway." But Kayden is the only one who can get through that gap.

You'll need to convince him.

- I'll wander over to the cellar doors and listen carefully. Then I'll point out to Kayden that there are no noises and we haven't seen any zombies on the island.
- "Come on, Kayden. There's nothing to be afraid of, and you're the only one small enough to get through. I'm sorry you're scared, but you're the only one who can do this, so you have to."
- "Listen, you little brat, we're lucky we've gotten this far. We're not spending the night freezing to death ten feet away from comfortable bedrooms just because you're afraid of the dark. Now let's go!"

The woman, who introduces herself as Mary, leads you through the basement, up the stairs, and into the mall proper. Up ahead you can see the place with the squishy chairs that seems to grow organically in the middle of every shopping mall. It's lit with bright and happy artificial mall light, it smells like coffee, and it's full of tents and people sitting outside tents, chatting. You start to relax at the sight...and then the unmistakable sound of zombie moans reaches your ears.

The moans are coming from a storefront just ahead and to the left, between you and the squishy-chair area. What are you going to do?

- Whip out my shotgun, find a place to shelter, and take aim.
- Hide behind Mary.
- Grab something to use as a weapon and charge in.
- Sprint in the other direction.

You see a gas station coming up on your right, and out of reflex you look down at your gas gauge—the smart thing to do when you're driving through back country roads. It's just over half full.

Under any other circumstances, you'd stop and fill up. But these aren't any other circumstances. There's no way to tell whether zombies will swarm out of the woods if you stop to fill the tank.

What do you do?

- Fill the tank. It's deserted around here; few people mean few zombies. And getting stranded because the car has run out of gas could be tragic.
- Keep going. There's something about the look of the place that gives me the creeps.

Not a strong effort. Quality of writing is mediocre and it ends fairly quickly.. First, I really, really like both text story games and zombies. So, I just KNEW I was going to like this game. But I just didn't. I spent an hour and a half for one playthrough, that I took my time doing, by the way, and I can't remember anything about it. There were no interesting or unique things about it. I remember thinking that these characters were winey and the storyline was SO typical. Like is this a story or a bunch of stereotypes throw together? It didn't even have achievements.

I also remember that since I got the Delta Force Operator I wanted to use it (even in just my first playthrough), so as a female I chose that as my profession and the game says something like "you're a delta operator? That means you're actually a dude right? Did you accidentally click to play as a woman lol? So let me ask you again if you actually want to play as a guy because women aren't Bad A enough to actually be bosses. I'm not even kidding people. Then it gives this "you actually ARE a woman, oh well screw the rules. We'll LET you do it. I'm REALLY not kidding, this isn't exactly what was said, but it's clear what they meant: If you are a Delta Operator, they expect you to be a male because a woman can't handle it in anything but a video game (I don't care if there are restrictions currently in place, we should NOT reinforce this idea even in a game!). This should have been the refund point. But nope. I had to keep going to see if it got better. It did not and I have no desire to play it again and see how it branched out.

I paid for the game AND DLC and now know why the only good review was from the guy who got it for free. I expected better from a "Choice of Game. : ^ V

. It's okay, not for me though. I love text based games usually, but this one is kinda lackluster and poorly written, the moment I decided to request a refund was when one of the characters mentioned following a "zombipocalypse facebook page." It's like it doesn't even want to take itself seriously, idk. If you like simple text based games, it might be worth the five dollars, I only played it for 10 minutes so maybe my opinion isn't all that valid here.. Playing it barely took any time .

It's over before it starts and at no point hard or surprising .

There's a dlc soldier but I can't imagine what you'd need him for...

I didn't care about the characters as well .

I recommend playing Zombie Exodus instead .

Great well written game ,interesting characters and long .

Just hoped this here would be a good zombie textadventure as well .

Unfortunately no such luck .
